The Viva-Voce Examination is designed to find out whether the candidates have acquired knowledge of the Kannada language necessary of general and social interact with the public of the State, especially with the village people (common folk).

It is not designed to find out whether the candidates have become scholars in the language. What is expected of them is that they should be able to read and write the simple kannada; that they should be able to read and understand the petitions presented by the public, especially villagers; that they should be able to converse easily and with fluency with the people particularly the rural folk and that they should be able to understand the needs of the common people expressed in the local language. In consideration of these objectives; there is no need to insist on the acquisition of a higher degree of proficiency in the Kannada language or its literature.

The Commission may also arrange for an informal conversation between a villager and the candidate for a short duration of ten minutes. During this conversation the ability of the candidate to understand and put across, idea fluently in Kannada could be judged.]
